

Prince's trust press release

Tytherington High School and Specialist Science College is pleased to receive the Prince's Teaching Mark for 2010/11.

Tytherington's English Department received the mark in recognition of its effective and inspiring teaching at all Key Stages, the quality of its curriculum planning and delivery and the extent and challenge of its extra- curricular work.

The English Department at Tytherington has a history of achieving outstanding results in public examinations, and prides itself on the quality and extent of its extra- curricular provision. An example of this is the Friday Society, which is an after school literary debating society for sixth form students of English and English Literature and which has proved extremely popular amongst students at the school.

Kevin Harrison, Head of Tytherington High School commented: "We are proud of our students' high achievements in English. The professionalism and dedication of the English team has contributed significantly to these achievements. The PTI mark gives appropriate recognition to their inspirational teaching which, I feel certain, will continue to inspire in the future."
