

Tytherington Sixth Former Publishes First Novel

Charles Eades, a student at Tytherington High School Sixth Form College, has just had his first novel published by Olympia Publishers.

His novel is entitled "Son of the Lamp", and is part of a trilogy. The second part of the trilogy is due to be published soon. Charles wrote "Son of the Lamp" when he was in Year 10, quite an amazing achievement.

The book tells the story of Chris Forrester who is a normal teenager until one day he wakes up at Genie Academy. He has no idea how he came to be there, or how to use his new magical powers. When he is called back into the teenage world he finds that he has to grant three wishes to a demanding and annoying teenage mistress. The tale unfolds as the two of them are plunged into a world of wicked fairies, grotesque monsters and dangerous magical weapons. The two can only survive if they can stop arguing!

Charles, who is hoping to study English Literature at university, has been a keen writer since he came to Tytherington in Year 7. At the time, he joined a Creative Writing Workshop in where he was inspired to write many successful pieces, some of which were published in Tytherington's own creative writing magazine. His writing has since blossomed and has now culminated in the publication of his first novel at the age of eighteen. The Tytherington community is very proud of him, and we look forward to the sequel to "Son of the Lamp."
